内容概要

"The new book edited by Kellerman et al. follows the established tradition of academic excellence in this field , The contributions to the volume range from informative to absolutely fascinating , It is very timely and certainly accomplishes the goals set by the editors within the auspices of the MATRA project. To date , the volume , stands out as the most vivid account of the current developments in the candidate countries and the the new Member States , providing an impressive overview of the similarity of problems all these countries are facing. "

-Dimitry Kochenov , University of Groningen , European Law Books In 2004 , ten countries joined the European Union as Member States and five others (Bulgaria , Croatia , Romania , Serbia and Montenegro , and Turkey) had or received (precandidate country status. EU accession requires significant adaptations in the laws and policies of a country. In order to analyse the impact of these developments and support the countries concerned , the T. M. C. Asser Institute in The Hague initiated a project which started in early 2003 and concluded during the Dutch EU presidency in October 2004. The fifteen country reports resulting from that project , written by national experts and updated by the volume editors , are presented in this book. As a comparative study of these countries , this is an excellent guide for the preparation of the national legal orders for EU accession , for briefing and training civil servants , judges , practitioners , officials of international organizations , and will be of great interest to academics and post-graduate students.
