章节摘录

Transport in USA In USA, transport system is quite developed and highways and trunk lines lead to each corner of the country. No matter where you go, you will find a convenient means to get there easily, by bus, by train, by car or by plane. By far, the cheapest way to get around is to take buses. The main long-distance operator, Greyhound, links all major cities and many towns. Along the main high-ways, buses run around the clock to a full timetable, stopping only for meal breaks. However, Greyhound buses are more uncomfortable than you could expect. Another choice is to take a train. The Amtrak Rail Service charge more money than Greyhound and it is reasonable because it offers a higher quality service. It is worth having a try if you have enough time. Traveling by train is full of fun and you may enjoy more scenery on the way than from the plane.

Cars are everywhere in America. Gas price in America is much lower than that of most European countries, so any family or anyone can afford a car. Furthermore, the income level is higher than that of most countries. For a few hundred dollars, a car can be purchased and it will take you from your yard to a peaceful coast. Many families like traveling by car in America.
