This book contains twelve papers on Criminal Law and sixteen papers on Public Law. The topics on Criminal Law cover the elements of criminal responsibility; objective attribution; traditional protection of life; modern cyber crimes; economic crime; and related issues on the scope of prosecution and the rule of law. Topics on Public Law include general and special administrative control; the issues of fundamental rights related to DNA and fingerprints; the establishment of administrative self-governance and parliamentary order; procedural issues on constitutional review. Authors of papers on Criminal Law embrace five research generations, and authors of papers on Public Law three research generations. These authors are known to be sincere writers and methodical researchers. We recommend their works to you.
