章节摘录

The dynamics (动因) of divergence (收入差距) across these sub-national areas have taken the form of (引发了) a "race to the top" (激烈竞争) — meaning that all parts of the population, including the poor with low education in backward inland rural areas, have experienced gains in average income. The largest gains have been registered by those with higher income and education in leading coastal urban areas. Using the China Economic, Population, Nutrition and Health Survey data of 1989 and 2008, we show that the most important factors explaining all inequality are differential returns to schooling and sector of employment. An analysis based on household income determination shows that the increase in returns to education explains two-thirds of income changes in urban areas and one-sixth in rural areas. The widening income gaps are the consequence of higher growth in leading urban and coastal areas and that the skilled population has benefited more from the economic reforms carried out during the last 30 years.
