The lessons contained in this set of books are products of experience in the schoolroom. They go forth in the hope of rendering some service to teachers and to children alike.

Throughout the work, the children ' s point of view has been kept in mind as well as the teacher ' s; First of all, they should be a book which children like to read. Every lesson centers about something in which children are interested. All teachers know that the labor of teaching is lessened when the interest of the pupils is assured.

The name of the Series testifies to another aim of the book,—to lead to a love of literature. Many of the stories and poems herein contained will be found again and again by the children in the world ' s best books. A taste for good things, developed now, will lead the pupils to demand good things when free to choose.

Reading enables us to see with the keenest eyes, and listen to the sweetest voices all time. The pupils are to be well-trained through reading these carefully selected readers.

This set of graded readers published in the beginning of 20th century was prescribed for use in the schools of Canada. Throughout the work, two main aims are considered. Firstly, every lesson centers about something in which children are interested. Secondly, the children are lead to a love of literature. Many of the stories and poems herein contained will be found again and again by the children in the world's best books.

Exercises "For Study" indicate important varieties of individual work. Both study of word-forms and study of thought in the text are included.

The choice of selections aims to improve the taste, train the judgment, ennoble the ideas, and exercises the imagination of the pupils. So they can develop a good preference for good literature.

版权页：插图：HERO Hero is our dog, the best dog in the world we think. Here is a picture of him. See how large he is! What a fine head he has! His name was Jack when he was a little fellow. Uncle Jack gave him to us when he went away "Here, children!" he said, "here is a playfellow for you. I must go away to sea. I cannot play with you nor take care of you again for a long time. "But this fellow, this Jack, will take my place. He will play all the time, if you like. And he will help to take care of you, too." So he did. When we were out at play; Jack was with us. If we went to the woods for flowers, Jack went too. If we were sent to get the milk, Jack ran along. If we went to school, Jack went too, and lay down by the door until recess. Everybody liked Jack, but Jack liked us best of all. If any boy wanted to tease Jack, he played that he meant to hurt us. Then Jack would stay close beside us, and growl at him until he became afraid and stopped his fun. "Good Jack! good old fellow!" we would say; patting him upon the head. "We are safe when you are with us." But I must tell you how we came to call him Hero. Baby May was playing in the yard. We were taking care of her, Helen and I. After a while we began to play tag. Of course May could not run fast, but she tried to play; because she liked to do what we did. She toddled after us, but we ran so fast that we were out of her sight before we knew it. We did not know what happened until afterwards. Baby toddled out into the road, and tried to follow us. She did not see the runaway horses that came rushing down the road toward her. She only saw Helen and me running away from her. On ran the horses! They were our own, and father was holding the reins; but the horses were mad with fear, and he could not guide them. Father saw Baby in the road. He shouted to her to run, but she only looked up, and stood still with fright in the middle of the road. The tramping feet were close upon our baby; but help was nearer yet.
