章节摘录

At any age, an injury to the head and brain can cause trouble with a person's memory. Some people who recover from brain injuries need to learn old things all over again, like how to talk or tie their shoes. That's why it's so important to protect your head. You may have heard about a memory problem called amnesia. This is why someone can't remember things that happened a short time ago. This happens sometimes, but it's not usually like you see on TV or in the movies. People rarely forget their own names and they usually get better slowly, instead of all at once because something dramatic happens - like getting kissed by a dreamy prince or princess! The most common cause of amnesia is a traumatic brain injury (TBI). A TBI is caused by a severe hit to the head. Car accidents, bike accidents, and falls can cause TBIs. If you've ever seen someone take a hit to the head in a National Football League game, you may have seen the player being questioned on the sidelines. The doctor may ask the person some basic questions — like what happened, where they are, and what team they're playing. Not knowing the correct answers could be the first sign of a brain injury.
