章节摘录

插图：As we all know very well, our time and energy are not inexhaustible. We must therefore use them very carefully, that is, we must economize on them. How can we do it in vocabulary learning? Table 1 is a useful guide. If you come across a word you do not know and feel that it is unlikely that you will use it yourself, you place it in your reading vocabulary. Hence you do not waste your time and energy in memorizing all the details about it, except that you make sure that you recognize it in your future reading. If instead you want to place it in your writing vocabulary, you have to make a close study of it. There is no rule of thumb for you to follow. The general guideline goes like this: There is a common core vocabulary consisting of 3000 to 4000 basic words that are shared by all the four types. They are normally covered in your previous study. It is worth noticing here that some of these basic words, although they may be already part of your reading and listening vocabulary, are not yet your speaking and writing vocabulary. Some more practice is perhaps needed to master them. The majority of words in the present three year courses go beyond the common core vocabulary. What should go to which type of vocabulary is up to you to decide.
