章节摘录

The informal part of vocabulary is traditionally subdivided into literary colloquial, familiar colloquial, low colloquial ( illiterate speech ) , folk speech ( dialect ) , slang and argot ( cant ) . Literary colloquial is used to denote the vocabulary used by educated people in the course of ordinary conversation or when writing letters to intimate friends. Familiar colloquial is more emotional and much freer than literary colloquial. It is also characterized by a great number of jocular or ironical expressions and non-words. Low colloquial is a term used for illiterate popular speech. It is very difficult to find hard and fast rules that help to establish the boundary between low colloquial and dialect because in actual communication the two are often used together. Folk speech is a linguistic system that is tied to specific region in such a way that the regional distribution of the system does not overlap with an area covered by another such system. It does not have officially standardized orthographic and grammatical rules. Slang words are identified and distinguished by contrasting them to standard literary vocabulary. They are words and phrases commonly used in talk but not suitable for good writing for formal occasions. They are expressive, mostly ironical words serving to create fresh names for some things that are frequent topics of discourse. For the most part they sound somewhat vulgar, cynical and harsh, aiming to show the object of speech in the light of an off-hand contemptuous ridicule. Vivid examples can be furnished by various slang words for money, such as beans, brass, dibs, dough, chink, oof, wads the slang synonyms for the word "head" are attic, brain-pan, hat peg, nut, upper storey, block, dome and coco. Argot refers to words or phrases used by a particular group ( thieves ) and not intended to be understood by others. Argot should be distinguished from slang. It serves to denote a special vocabulary and idiom, used by a particular social or age group, especially by the so-called underworld ( the criminal circles ) .
